

How to prepare your paper

In all seminars and summer schools, the PhD fellows' own presentation of papers based on their dissertation work, with prepared responses by other PhD students, is central. The focus of the discussions will be primarily on methodological matters and interdisciplinary insights.

Please read ATTR's Seminar guide carefully.

The participants are at different stages in their PhD work. There are thus two options:

- I. Project description, for those who participate for the first time and are early in their research process: Present your project, 10-15 pages(not counting the bibliography). The written project presentation should begin with an abstract (max 150 words) that includes your research question, method/approach, and main conclusions.

- II. Part of dissertation, for those who are further along in their research process, or who have already presented their project at an earlier ATTR event: Present a part of your dissertation, no longer than 25 pages (not counting the bibliography). Include, in addition, a table of contents for your dissertation, and an abstract of your PhD project no longer than one page, in order to place of the current paper within the dissertation as a whole. You may also note what you would like the respondent to focus on.

Before you submit your paper:

Please adjust the format to the following standard

- Times New Roman
- size 12, double-spaced
- number the pages
- .pdf-format
- include a header with your full name

Name your document: Full name, option, Oslo 2017.

For example: "Leonora O. Bergsjø, II, Oslo 2017"
